Dolls' House

Peter Jones

A DERELICT DOLLS' HOUSE and an abandoned bag of costumes are the original, if unexpected inspiration behind Café Reason's enigmatic new show. Combining dance, live music, and film, this production explores the classic dream symbol of 'The House' and opens a window on the inhabitants' secret lives and eternal dilemmas.

Bizarre, moving, and darkly comic, the performance uses specially-composed music, based on a numerical puzzle, to underpin the characters' struggle with the limitations of their bodies, gender, roles, and relationships.

"Café Reason... create a world of nothing and mystery"

(Matrix, 2012) Oxford Times

DOLLS' HOUSE is a collaboration with film maker and digital artist Dariusz Dziala, and musicians Malcolm Atkins, Bruno Guastalla, and Pete McPhail, who work extensively as composer/performers with a wide range of contemporary music and dance/theatre groups.

CAFÉ REASON is an experimental performance group specialising in butoh – an iconoclastic dance form that originated in post-war Japan. Constantly innovating, the group seeks to extend the boundaries of perception and the interpretation of human experience.
